Join us to pray the Rosary 30 minutes before each Mass!

In the first reading, we hear that God opens Isaiah's ears to hear God's Word. In the psalm, God hears the cries of his people. Isaiah's declaration, "The Lord God is my help," finds expression in the psalmist's plea ("O LORD, save my life!") and his praise that God heard and saved him when he cried out.

Continuing last week's discussion, the second reading focuses on how the poorest members of the assembly are to be treated. It would do a person no good to be wished peace and warmth but not be fed or receive proper clothing. James emphasizes the need to demonstrate faith through action. In this case, he means the concrete actions of caring for the bodily needs of brothers and sisters who are hungry or need clothing. "The LORD keeps the little ones" (Ps 116:6), and so must the follower of Christ.

The Gospel shows Peter at his best and at his worst in swift succession. First, Peter has a flash of insight; he recognizes and confesses Jesus as the Christ, sent from God to save the people. But then he rebukes Jesus, horrified at the thought that the Messiah (and his friend and Lord) must suffer and die. He is certain that the Messiah triumphs and is exalted to David's throne, not nailed to a Roman cross. Jesus sternly corrects Peter: the temptation to avoid the path of suffering and death is from Satan. The path to glory and exaltation leads through the cross, not around it. Like the prophet Isaiah, who refused to defend himself against his tormentors but cast all his hopes onto God, Jesus knows that whoever loses his life for the sake of the Gospel will save it. Like the psalmist, Jesus trusts that God will save him even from death and that he will "walk before the Lord in the land of the living" (Ps 116:9).
